General Comment

I am opposed to that portion of this rule that restricts options trading. I have invested a lot of my time becoming fully educated on options trading and do not need the government to "protect" me in my trades. Furthermore, options can make trading less risky than buying stock outright, so why would you want to restrict them in the name of consumer protection? And if you want to provide "protection" why in the world would you want to prohibit brokerage firms from providing consumer education on using options?

Please eliminate this portion of this regulation.

Sincerely

John W. McBeath
